

Tarah Carnahan

Tarah is deeply passionate about the intersections of culture, community and creativity. She is the Executive Director and Co-Founder of Treetops Collective an organization committed to the long-term belonging and flourishing of New American women and teen girls in West Michigan. Treetops accomplishes this goal through connecting new neighbors to people and opportunities within the community that is welcoming them and investing into New American women's leadership! She holds a Master's of Sustainable Business from Aquinas College and her background is rooted in social enterprise and women's economic development, from the slums of Asuncion, Paraguay to her current street corner in Grand Rapids. She deeply believes that robust communities begin with the celebration of strengths, and a commitment to create room at the table to see those gifts utilized for the benefit of all.
